MUNSTERBERG SAYS TELEPATHY DOESN'T EXIST

But Eminent Harvard Authority
Declares Hypnotism Is Real and Useful.

DRINK PROBLEM IS GRAVE He Believes Strongly in Temperance, but Not in Total Abstinence.

MUNSTERBERG, recently does not exist. I have come to this conclusion after many years of study and investigation. I have concluded that there is no such thing as telepathy. Prof. Hugo Münsterberg of Harvard University, one of the leading authorities on psychology in this country, makes this declaration. As Dr. Münsterberg is a disciple of the psychologist of Harvard, and a Harvard man, his opinion is of great importance. He has written several important books on psychology, and his opinion on the subject of mental telephony is not important. As many people have accepted mental telephony as an established fact, it becomes the duty of the public to know the truth. Prof. Münsterberg, Prof. William James, Prof. James H. Hyslop, Dr. Miss J. Neveanu and Dr. John D. Quinn Jones have all written their books on telepathy. Prof. Münsterberg's opinion is that telepathy is a myth. He believes that the mind is a powerful organ, but it is not a telegraph. He believes that the mind is a powerful organ, but it is not a telegraph. He believes that the mind is a powerful organ, but it is not a telegraph.

there, in which a number of the latter were used for "smoke" and "snare."

As whistles were much in vogue in this play, many large soldiers wore whistles the neck around in order to be prepared if called upon to take part.

"There are factional fights going on among them continually. Every nation was represented—the Irish Parliament, the Russian element, the German Government, etc. The hero of 'Under the Gas Light' is supposed to be a one-armed soldier, who is tied to a railroad track, with his

"I was the hero. By some miraculous dispensation of Providence, just at the moment, the first who has been rescued from the danger break loose and jump out in the time to pull her lover from the track and save his life. Everything would have gone off beautifully this night."

It didn't make a particle of difference, but the Dutch had the longest as the argument was settled, and it is needless to say that the Irish beat the Dutch."

Remorse—Do Not Try to Escape It.

PAIN is the great primary teacher. The sensitive nerves in the animal body supply continuous warning of the presence of danger. The infant human being, as well as the infant rhinoceros, learns to prolong life by avoiding the things that cause pain. The baby, beginning the long series of experiments with nature that go to make up his existence, usually finds for himself that fire will burn, that kittens will scratch and that swinging doors will pinch tender fingers. Of course, he is told these things as soon as he is old enough to understand. But spoken advice does not go very deep. Actual experience, actual pain is the teacher whose lessons are not forgotten.

When the child is a little older he begins to learn that there is such a thing as mental torture. The suffering that follows knowledge of having done wrong troubles him. He is not old enough to give it its name—REMORSE—but he understands its power, if he fails to appreciate its purpose. And as that child grows up his usefulness in the world will depend very largely upon his capacity for remorse. Find a man or woman who suffers after having done another an injury, wasted an opportunity or permitted self-indulgence to lead into folly, and you will find a really good man or woman. Remorse is often a rough companion, but as long as you take it with you you are safe from any serious danger.

It is because of the very roughness of remorse that most human creatures seek to subdue it. It is not pleasant to lie awake at night in an agony of regret because of some action that cannot be recalled. Neither is it pleasant to pick up a live electric wire on the street corner. But the contact with the wire teaches you to let other similar wires alone in the future, and thereby possibly saves your life. As long as you do wrong—and, being human, it is probable that that will be as long as you live—you must not wince at the punishment remorse inflicts upon you. Resist it, overcome it, and there will be very little left of your power to do any good in the world, either to yourself or to any one else.

Milton, who knew human nature as few men have known it, wrote: So farewell hope; and with hope, farewell fear, Farewell REMORSE, all good to me is lost! Remember that line when next you seek to still that troubling voice within which reveals you to yourself as you actually are. Sometimes it is necessary for you to take stock of yourself and your actions. Do it fearlessly, and without sparing your pride or your feelings. And the pain of rehashing just what you are and just what you have been will last long enough in your memory to prevent your going out and making the same mistake, at least the next day.

On many an unquiet pillow has been born the determination to do better in the future that has made great careers.

It is often said of men whose ability is clouded by whiskey drinking that they can do their best work when just recovering from a protracted "drunk."

Of course, the apologists for drinking seek to make capital of this, insisting that the mind recovering from the effects of liquor stupefaction is clearer than the normal mind. Such idiocy can be dismissed without comment.

The thing that makes the convalescent drunkard pitch in and do his best is the remorse that comes with convalescence.

Still racked by the pain of the liquor disease, ashamed and conscience stricken at his weakness, and feeling the absolute hopelessness of doing anything worth doing while he continues to drink, he makes good resolutions and keeps them long enough to make a fresh start and try to live less like a beast and more like a man.

Any achievement requires some incentive. To do anything out of the ordinary, to begin any difficult work, to get out of the deadly dullness of every-day life, there must be something to overturn the balance of monotony and waken the sleeping energy within a man.

Perhaps nothing will do that as effectively as remorse; and no class of human beings suffers so acutely from remorse as do the thinkers.

Thus, then, is the reason that a man will often emerge from a heavy alcoholic sleep and do better work than he has ever done before.

It is a pity that in more cases the remorse is not a little rougher. If it could be made still more severe, it might point out to its victim that leaving whiskey alone altogether would be conducive to more success by day and sounder and more untroubled sleep by night.

Most men of action keep their eyes upon the future, letting the past take care of itself. It is, of course, unwise to dwell upon past success. The man whose achievements in the past claim his attention is not likely to have any achievements in the future to concern himself with.

But no man can afford to pass lightly over his mistakes, or to bid his conscience be quiet when it upbraids him for the wrongs he has done to others or to himself.

A Rough and Ruthless Adviser—But Once Part Company with Him and Your Capacity for Good Is Forever Lost.

We are not discussing the kind of remorse which comes to the thief who has been locked up in jail, or to the evildoer who hopes by a desultory repentance to gain the Paradise that he has not deserved.

The man who indulges in remorse in a cell is speedily cured of it when good luck happens to get him out.

The murderer or other malefactor whose remorse is merely the fear of getting caught does not benefit by his sessions with his conscience.

With the certainty of punishment staring him in the face, the basest of men will be remorseful. His repentance saddens him till the fear of punishment is past; then it disappears as if by magic.

It is well, when considering unworthy actions, whether the pain that is born of thinking of them is due to real remorse or to fear of consequences. The latter is human, but ignoble. It brings no results that lead to good.

But really repenting of evil, fearlessly looking facts in the face and judging yourself as mercilessly as you would judge another man in your place, makes character, and character makes men.

To discard all illusions as to false reasons for a mean action or an exhibition of greed or avarice or malice or envy, to brush aside all excuses and resolve that, had as the action was, it will be a step toward decent behavior in the future—that is to help yourself as none other—not the most experienced or the wisest in the world—can help you.

There is bad in every man. In the best it will crop out at times. Only by building character can a man keep a straight course, avoid temptations and be square with his brother men.

Character building is a slow and painful process. And one of the most important factors in it is remorse—the honesty to realize that wrong has been done, the manliness to be sorry for it, without regard to possible consequences, and the courage to resolve that it shall not be repeated.

You must keep remorse with you through life, but by being honest with yourself you will find that your unpleasant experiences with it will become less and less frequent as the years go by.

New Providence Company Will Deliver Coal Great Saving in Transportation and Phenomenal Boston House

So absolutely has New England for many years bowed in tribute and with a "by-your-service" expression tendered just as many shovels as have been required to "the few Christian gentlemen" (as one of them described him) who got lost out on a snow-cold in his beneficent wisdom had in himself the great authentic coal fields for so many years as also nullified the cold blasts of the north wind and the still chill of the east wind by the greed of those excess talent-multipliers and self-styled "philanthropic" custodians of the nation's fuel storehouse, that the above statement may well be taken for granted and on that basis one may stand throughout the future.

pendent of their reaction and extortions, for under His dictates Dame Nature has hidden away in New England's own formations enough for her own needs. And not only many hands and much genius and skill are unearthing the truth, but the imagination she will soon be free from the fetters of the "purple" mountains to whom for three-score years she has dropped an annual visit.

Anthracite Coal at Six Dollars per ton is indeed another Declaration of Independence, but they may have and will reach the mines—still give credit to the wealth to those who supply him with operating capital and coarsely enlarge the domain of both. Beneath the old granite peaks of Cranston immediately following the great cry of Providence has been discovered the long-sought and very fortunate anthracite coal. For a distance of a mile the outcrop is a very fertile field who has been determined, a bare eight feet of gravel below the surface of the land.

The history of the early discovery of coal in New England in 1908, the relations of the discovery to the workings since years later, the decade that followed and the conditions and events which have led to the resumption of activities in the old properties and to the development of new ones makes an interesting study. The discovery of the coal in Cranston has been the cause of the resurrection of the old granite mines of Cranston from a period embracing more than a score of years of granite hanning to the dynamic battle re-sounding to the drill below in the coal beneath. From the year from which without largest and best veins of anthracite coal has been discovered in Cranston has now been proven to have been little more than a shingle roof above one of the upper levels, because of the inadequate pumping mechanism of that day, cause of the lack of artificial ventilating system entailing a considerable loss of time while the atmosphere cleared from blasts, they were fully able to compete with the mining cost under much more favorable conditions in the then shallow mines of Pennsylvania. In addition to this was the slowness on the part of the local laws, to accept the custom of rescuing and smoothing and so

But one of these objections which led to the abandonment at that date of the application to the coalitions today. Pumping and ventilating systems are merely an ordinary detail of mining, which the second generation of miners had to learn to do for themselves. The first generation of miners, however, had to be taught by their fathers, but, now the old devil at New England's first mine had been eliminated, the second generation had to teach itself the children conditions for in New England that newly discovered mines with near surface veins and consequent narrow economies are to be found. All of this as applied to present-day competitive copper smelting is shown in the following table:

Rhode Island is of little importance to the world's copper supply without any other advantages of any sort, the great advantage as far as the New England concern is concerned, is the saving in transportation alone. The cost of shipping the ore from the mines of the West to the smelter in half of the present price of coal in this section. This advantage alone could insure to the mines of New England for many years at least the same proportion to the population it has for eight million people one of the largest per capita coal consumptions to be found; this is, of course, due to the extreme coldness of the winters, but far more largely still to the fact that the population is so small.

Some geologists all agree that the entire State of Rhode Island rests within the bow of a water-like bed of coal. This contention, or opinion, is not a new one, having long been known by the many of the State's leading geologists. It is a fact that the local mineral resources of this State are rich in life from the years of abundance in which the old properties now being so creatively worked had laid, kept commercial enterprise for years from exploiting the coal in the State. The coal is not only abundant, but it is also of a high quality. The many men of business among who believe that Nature's fairly constructed resources require that the coal in some sections of the State be treated chemically in order to perfect the quality of the coal, and that the coal be used in the form of gas, they look upon the burning embers of a fire of coal, and with a certain amount of anxiety insist that it cannot be true—"it doesn't burn." This adds only another link to the many errors prevalent in this century, that the truth of a thing can only be investigated.

How to Win a Prize.

DIRECTIONS—Either cut out the hat to be trimmed or make a model similar to it. Then either cut out the articles to be used in trimming it or make them just like those printed here.

Trim the hat to suit your taste, using paste or needle and thread to hold the articles in place on the hat. The materials on this page are enough to trim the hat in several different styles.

Plainly mark the finished hat with your name and address, BUT DO NOT MAIL IT NOW!

This hat printed here to-day is the third in a series of four similar pages. Next Sunday, on this page, will be a full length figure to dress, which will be the last of the series.

DO NOT send in your trimmed hat or dressed figure each week. KEEP THEM UNTIL ALL FOUR are finished, and then MAIL THEM ALL TOGETHER, addressed to

Two Weeks Ago—Hat to be trimmed

Last Sunday—Figure to be dressed

Today—Another hat to be trimmed

Next Sunday—Another Figure to be dressed

Trim the hat printed here to-day, but keep it at home until you have cut and trimmed all the four articles which complete this competition, or as many as you mean to send in. Then, after dressing next Sunday's Figure, mail them. Here are some of the prizes:

Diagram Showing the Course of Halley's Comet During the Present and Coming Years With the Dates of Its Successive Positions and the Three Principal Danger Points, Which Are When It Enters the Earth's Plane, When It Comes Nearest to the Earth and When It Leaves the Earth's Plane.

HALEY'S comet, the most famous comet of history and astronomy, will appear in the sky on May 19, 1910, when it is just one day past perihelion in its eighth year.

What is still more startling is the announcement made by Professor Frank B. Seagrave, the Providence astronomer, that the comet will appear the same place as the彗星 seen in 1910.

[illegible]

By Professor Garrett P. Serviss.

THE presence of manulys in the present day, is a factor in the argument that the earth has been the theatre of life for 200 million years. It is a factor of life? They cannot well be in perpetration, i.e., at its present point of development, if the earth is 200 million years old. It is hard to see how the existence of manulys in the world is easily explained. It is a problem which has been discussed by many of our leading scientists, and it is a problem which has not yet been solved. It is a problem which has not yet been solved. It is a problem which has not yet been solved.

There are many known objects in the orbits intersected by the comet, and the same will hold true for the new comet as well as at the closest point simultaneously with the earth and the redoubt had gone.

A very significant thing is that the most massive comet revolved in the extremely elongated orbits and reveal their tails only after billions of thousands of years. There is a great many comets of this class which have not been seen since our extreme human history began to be recorded, but which will be about to appear in a few

The famous comet, that of Biela, has been observed in the act of splitting up and changing into meteors.

A comet is not a compact mass but is usually transparent, even through the nucleus.

The earth passed through a comet's tail in 1910 and in 1961. Hundreds of cubic miles of a comet's tail are outswiped by a jar of air.

According to Sir Oliver Lodge and others, a comet's tail is made of particles of material electrically ionized, sometimes smaller than an atom.

Professor Charles A. Young, an astronomer, has said that "it is not between the earth and the comet is bound to occur."

The comets are not described as being

Halley's Comet Sketched As It Appeared Nucleus Showing Three

How did the comet come to be in order to formulating predictions for the accurate determination of some future Halley's appearance? The answer is that the comet is known to be the most irregularly shaped of the bodies of our system. It is not a sphere, but a collection of small, irregularly shaped fragments, which, in the past, have been so close to the sun that a swiftly moving body would be broken in pieces by the heat of the sun. This is the case. It is not a solid body, but a collection of fragments, which, in the past, have been so close to the sun that a swiftly moving body would be broken in pieces by the heat of the sun. This is the case. It is not a solid body, but a collection of fragments, which, in the past, have been so close to the sun that a swiftly moving body would be broken in pieces by the heat of the sun. This is the case.

It is possible to calculate the rate of heat developed by the heat of the sun, and the results of such a calculation, when the moving body possesses considerable mass, are truly amazing. A matter as small as a ball of iron weighing one pound, and traveling 1,000 feet per second, on striking a target solid enough to bring it to rest would develop, almost instantly, sufficient heat to raise the temperature of the whole mass of iron and the heat of the target would be more than 1,000 degrees.

If the velocity were a mile per second and that of a comet striking the earth were to be even greater, the temperature developed would be 1,000,000 degrees.

And it would not be only the iron ball. Enough of that material had been struck that it would be heated to a temperature of 1,000,000 degrees. The heat would be divided between the iron ball and the target, and the target would be heated to a temperature of 1,000,000 degrees.

There would be no more clouds, for clouds are formed by the condensation of moisture around minute specks of dust, and consequently there would be no rain, because rain cannot fall except when the moisture has collected in drops. The sun would be able to collect an immense view over a landscape on which the sun's rays were falling without any floating particles in the air to diffuse the light.

The face of the country would appear streaked and checkered with huge bands and patches of blackness, formed by the shadows of the mountains. The mountains themselves would be the unillumined spaces not lit by the

A person standing just on the margin line would seem to have been cut in two, the moiety of his body remaining miraculously erect.

The sources of such dust are innumerable. A buoyancy of the air for minute particles is surprising. Miles high the found sand and volcanic dust is carried by the wind. The elevation of the lower clouds, the strata which shows that much of the dust which the air contains of innumerable grains of starch, and other particles on the winds up to 1000 meters or less into the atmosphere.

Then the sky itself contributes. The dust of meteors burned in the air falls continually, although it is not visible. It is the source of the tons of these tiny bodies, shooting through space with planetary velocity, enter the atmosphere of the earth every twenty-four hours, and are consumed by the heat of their friction with the air.

Meteoritic dust is found on the snow fields of the polar regions, and on the bottom of the ice seas. It is clearly a vast quantity of dust from the surface of the earth. Volcanoes sometimes

YOU can improve your health in thirty days by increasing* the amount of Quaker Oats you eat.

A great many persons look upon Quaker Oats as merely a delicious cereal food to be eaten at breakfast, but millions of families have found that it is much more; they have found that frequent and regular eating of Quaker Oats resulted in clearer skin, rosier cheeks, firmer muscles and clearer and more active minds; and while they have learned these things by experience, scientists have found by investigation, analyses and experiments that Quaker Oats contains the best elements of human food without waste. It is the best and cheapest food.

Begin with the Month of November and prove it in your own family!

Eat Quaker Oats at least once each day during this month; vary the ways of preparing it to suit the taste; cut out a corresponding amount of greasy foods and watch the results. You'll be astonished at the improvement in the health and vigor of the family, and you'll continue to eat it every month in the year.

Thousands of good grocers will make a special display of Quaker Oats in November to remind you to do this; millions of families will be doing the same thing; repeated experiences of this kind with the rosy cheeks, firmer muscles and clearer brains that resulted have made everlasting friends for Quaker Oats.

The best and cheapest food you can eat.

Quaker Oats is packed in the regular size 10c package; in large size Family packages, and in hermetically sealed tins.

Twin Cylinder 6½ H. P.

Twelve months ago we began work on the most wonderful motor cycle the world has ever seen—the 1930 twin cylinder Yale.

All year long the facilities of the largest and finest motor cycle plant in America were focused on the production of a model which sets a high-water mark in twin cylinder motor cycle construction.

Meanwhile the 1930 single cylinder Yale was sweeping everything before it. In the most terrific test of endurance ever held—the 600-mile Chicago run—three Yale riders set a new world's record and carried off the silver cup.

With some tweaks on motor, mark pipe, carburetor and battery box, all three Yale riders came through with perfect scores.

single cylinder—the Yale again shows through with perfect scores. The 1910 Yale motor cycle is the only one from Indiana, and this triumph was repeated without a single loss for another 10 years. So, in building the two new 1910 Yale models—single cylinder and twin cylinder—and the advantage not only of the year's motor cycle enterprise but of the first place in Indiana, but the most wonderful seems a performance on record.

You will never ride or see a motor cycle which will compare with the two 1910 Yale models. The single cylinder is a real triumph for the motor cycle. The twin cylinder is good for 65 miles an hour—50 miles an hour is easy for the single.

Indians are the one great test of motor cycle efficiency—and on that score the Yale holds the world's record.

If you'll write at once, you'll be that the Yale is supreme on every other point as well.
